Caitlin Bowler (MCP '08) returned to academia to pursue an MCP at Penn this fall, after working in Tahoe City, CA and Somerville, MA for several years. Previously she studied history and art history at Williams College.

Adam Davidson (MCP '07) received a B.A. in Environmental Policy and International Relations from Tulane University. He is interested in regional policies and urban sustainability.

Lindsay Duerr (MCP '07) is concentrating in Community and Economic Development. She is interested in pursuing inner-city revitalization and the economic development of post-industrial cities.

Beth Falkof (MCP '07) began her Penn journey as an undergraduate studying Fine Arts and Folklore. An MCP candidate with a Community and Economic Development concentration, she is particularly interested in knowledge and creative economies.

David Gest (MCP '08, JD '10) is pursuing a dual degree in Law and City and Regional Planning with a focus in Community and Economic Development. He is a member of the Student Planning Association and the Penn International Planning Club.

Imogen Wirth-Granlund (MCP '08, MSHP '08) is concentrating in Environmental Planning and Growth Management and pursuing a dual degree in Historic Preservation. Her decision to embark on a planning career was inspired by the community visioning process in her hometown of Emmaus, Pennsylvania; though she much prefers her current South Philly neighborhood to small town life.

Shekoofah Khedhri (MCP '07) is concentrating in Community and Economic Development and completing a Graphic Design Certificate. With an architectural background and design experience at Nakheel, she will return to Dubai to support enhancement of physical urban design under the current economic, environmental, social and political circumstances.

Christina Lindsey (MCP '08) is interested in urban redevelopment and adaptive reuse projects as well as regional planning. She received a B.S. in Construction Science and Management from Clemson University, and is a Chartered Financial Analyst (CFA).

Sarah Lynch (MCP '08) is a submatriculant from the Growth and Structure of Cities program at Bryn Mawr College, where she recently completed her senior thesis on the ongoing crisis of the French banlieue.

Justus Stewart (MCP '07) has a background in theater and small-scale agriculture, focusing on urban garden farming. While at PennDesign, Justus has concentrated in Environmental Planning and Growth Management, and has an avid interest in urban sustainability.

Jessica Schmidt (MCP '08) received a B.A. in Urban Studies and Architecture from Columbia in 2004. Denise Scott Brown's long involvement at Penn and many substantial achievements made this paper easy to write.
