Biographical/Historical Sketch

Allen Evans was born in Paoli, Pennsylvania, son of Edmund Cadwalader Evans, MD (1812-1881) and Mary Louisa Allen Evans. He studied two years at the Philadelphia Polytechnic College, and by 1869 he was employed in the office of Samuel Sloan. By 1871 Evans had moved to Furness & Hewitt. In 1881 he became a full partner with Frank Furness and the firm's name became Furness & Evans. In 1885 the firm was expanded to become Furness, Evans & Co. Evans carried on the firm under the same name after Furness's death in 1912.

Furness was unquestionably the dominating personality in the firm until his declining years, and it is difficult to establish definitively Evans's role in the design of the firm's projects. According to biographical materials [099.36] prepared by his daughter, Margaret Evans, after his death, "Frank Furness was the bizarre, original and brilliantly artistic member of the firm, while Mr. Evans took care of the more practical part of the planning. His tastes were more quiet and tended towards simplicity of line and careful proportions. This showed in some of the later buildings which were more under his influence, at the end of Mr. Furness' life, and after his retirement and death - notably the Girard Trust Company Building . . . which was largely of Mr. Evans' designing." From the time Evans entered the office, his family and personal connections brought in a stream of residential and ecclesiastical commissions, and it appears that Evans may also have borne principal responsibility for the design of a number of the commissions he brought to the firm, most clearly the houses and churches for his own family and friends. Evans's friendship with Alexander J. Cassatt was responsible for a number of Pennsylvania Railroad commissions, including the Broad Street Station in Philadelphia. Whatever Evans's role may have been in the Broad Street Station project, the design and details bear witness that Furness retained the upper hand. The commission for the Girard Bank Building in Philadelphia came to the firm entirely because of Evans, in face of outspoken antipathy from members of the bank board toward Furness's characteristic style. The bank was not told of any role Furness played in its design, but he later claimed substantial credit.

Evans was married in 1876 to Rebecca Chalkley Lewis, daughter of John T. Lewis, a prominent Philadelphia businessman, with extensive social and Episcopal Church connections. They lived in Penrhyn, the house in Haverford, Pennsylvania built by Furness & Hewitt for Evans's father shortly after he entered the office. When it burned in 1898, he rebuilt on the same land, where they lived until his death in 1925. Another house was designed for his brother Rowland on his father's property, and they jointly owned a rental house on adjoining land (alterations and additions ca. 1883). After Allen Evans's death, members of his family continued to live in houses within the family compound.

Allen Evans and his brother Rowland were founding members of the Merion Cricket Club (1865) and he was instrumental in moving it (1892-1893) to Haverford. Furness, Evans & Co. designed its first clubhouse at the Haverford location; and after that structure was destroyed by fire, the firm designed a much larger clubhouse (extant).

Allen Evans was a founding member of St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Ardmore (1887) and served on the vestry for 38 years. Furness, Evans & Co. designed the church in 1887 and also an addition (1923). Rebecca Evans was very active in parish life from the founding until her death in 1927. Their son Allen Evans entered the Episcopal ministry. He attended Yale Divinity School (B.D. 1917) and served as Dean of the Philadelphia Divinity School, 1937-1947.

Scope and Content Note

This collection comprises records and papers kept by Allen Evans, Rebecca Evans and their daughter Margaret Evans, donated to the Architectural Archives by the widow of Allen Evans, grandson of the architect. Materials kept by Allen Evans focus on his architectural projects, including houses on the property of Edmund C. Evans designed and built for family members. Other family materials include correspondence, memorials and clippings on the death of Allen Evans, materials related to Rebecca Evans's activities as a member of St. Mary's Church, Ardmore and materials related to family involvement in the Merion Cricket Club. In addition, the collection includes biographical materials about Allen Evans prepared by Margaret Evans in 1938 and later family photographs.

Materials related to architectural projects are found in a project scrapbook of newsclippings as well as in an additional small quantity of correspondence, photographs, drawings and clippings. Evans preserved materials related to a small number of projects, and it could be inferred that these projects were ones in which he was particularly active. Of particular interest among these materials are:

- 1) reproductions of a legal deposition by Frank Furness concerning design of the Girard Bank Building;
- 2) correspondence with Alexander Cassatt;
- 3) a set of small-scale renderings (1921) by George W. Casey of Furness, Evans & Co. for All Saints Church, Wynnewood, PA.

Formal architectural drawings are found for a few projects in which the Evans family was directly involved, e.g., family houses and St. Mary's Church. Some projects documented by Evans are not found in published job lists of the firm's work.

The collection contains no office project files. Limited financial materials for the firm are found in the collection for the years 1908-1923, not complete. A group photograph shows members of Furness, Evans & Co. in 1918.

The collection contains substantial biographical and genealogical information about Allen Evans, especially in correspondence to Rebecca Evans on her husband's death and in the materials prepared by their daughter Margaret in 1938 for the National Cyclopedia of American Biography. Biographical information is also found for Rebecca Evans and their six children, including photographs of some of the grown children. In addition, researchers may find useful materials related to the history of St. Mary's Church, of the Merion Cricket Club, and of housing in and development of Haverford, Pennsylvania.
