Biographical/Historical Sketch

Born in Florence to a Philadelphia family, Wilson Eyre, Jr. (1858-1944), enjoyed a prolific practice in the Philadelphia area and beyond over the course of five decades. Eyre briefly attended M.I.T. and then worked in the Philadelphia office of James Peacock Sims for several years. Following Sims's premature death in 1882, Eyre took over his practice and soon built a national reputation for his Shingle-style houses and his engagingly free renderings. The heart of his work was domestic, with several very notable exceptions, including the University of Pennsylvania Museum. He was one of the founders of the T-Square Club of Philadelphia in 1883. Through it and the widespread exhibition and publication of his drawings, his influence was felt widely, both locally and nationally.

Scope and Content Note

The University of Pennsylvania acquired the bulk of its Eyre collection in the 1950s through the generosity of Eyre's younger sister, sculptor Louisa Eyre (1872-1953). With the assistance of Alfred Bendiner (executor of Wilson Eyre's estate), she also gave smaller collections to repositories in New York City, Detroit, and Princeton, sites of some of his work. The University's holdings were transferred to the Architectural Archives after 1978. The Archives holdings have since grown through the addition of drawings for University of Pennsylvania buildings and through other gifts, including two drawings known to have been in the possession of architect Louis I. Kahn.

The collection comprises 988 drawings (including originals, prints and photostats) documenting 147 buildings and projects designed between 1880 and 1938 by Wilson Eyre, his predecessor James Peacock Sims (1849-1882), and his later partner in the firm of Wilson Eyre & McIlvaine (fl. 1911-1939), John Gilbert McIlvaine (1880-1939). The most significant materials in the collection are Eyre's magnificent large-scale renderings and sketches in watercolor, charcoal, and pastel (over 500 in number) including those for country residences, townhouses, apartment houses, gardens, commercial buildings, institutional buildings, architectural details, posters, and travel sketches. The bulk of the architectural projects represented in the collection are located in Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. The collection also has holdings for a smaller number of projects located elsewhere on the eastern seaboard, as well as Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Louisiana and California.

Two projects are particularly well represented in the collection. Holdings for the University of Pennsylvania Museum include large-scale renderings by Eyre and Charles Z. Klauder, design drawings and master plan studies, and a large number of prints documenting the various stages of construction as executed by the collaborative efforts of Eyre, Walter Cope & John Stewardson, and Frank Miles Day & Charles Klauder. Holdings for the Horatio Gates Lloyd House, also known as "Allgates", include presentation renderings by Eyre and a large number of prints documenting the original construction, various additions, and landscape and garden work designed by Horace Wells Sellers. With the exception of these two projects, researchers can expect each project to be represented by only a small handful of presentation drawings. The collection does not include business files, project files or photography.

The collection contains some drawings that are not related to architectural projects, including European and American travel sketches. Eyre's travel sketches include: Pavia, Siena, Pistoia, Rouen, Litchfield, Philadelphia, New Castle (Delaware). Notable subjects are Mount Vernon, Mount Pleasant, Old Christ Church (Philadelphia), and William L. Price's Blenheim and Traymore Hotels in Atlantic City. The collection preserves several examples of posters designed by Eyre, including several for the Devon Horse Show and one for the annual architectural exhibit held at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts.

In preparing this finding aid, the staff of the Architectural Archives have relied heavily on research files assembled between the 1950s and 1990s by Edward Teitelman, Betsy Fahlman and Jeffrey Cohen. These files are on permanent deposit in the Archives.
