Biographical/Historical Sketch

As a landscape architect concerned with creating open space in cities, Robert Mitchell Hanna achieved national recognition by constructing serene landscapes in some of our nation's most populous urban centers. Born in Deming, New Mexico in 1936 and subsequently raised in Seattle, Washington, Hanna earned a BA in architecture in 1959 from the University of Washington. Following a three year apprenticeship with architect Dan Miller (b. 1923), Hanna worked in the office of landscape architect Richard Haag (b. 1923). This experience shifted the course of his career to landscape design and provided the first opportunity for professional collaboration with his future partner Laurie Olin (b. 1938). Formal training in landscape architecture followed, beginning with his graduation from the Harvard Graduate School of Design in 1967 and culminating with a fellowship at the American Academy in Rome in 1976.

At the University of Pennsylvania, Hanna became the driving force behind a renewed focus on the material realities of design within the context of ecological planning. Joining the faculty at the invitation of Ian McHarg in 1969, his focus on the human experience of landscapes, both rural and urban, complemented McHarg's emphasis on regional analysis. As chair of the new Design of the Environment program in 1974, Hanna recruited Olin to Philadelphia to teach design where the two would later join in professional practice. Hanna remained a professor at the University of Pennsylvania until his death in 2003.

In 1976 Robert Hanna and Laurie Olin formed the partnership Hanna/Olin (1976-1995) to design the grounds of I. M. Pei and Partners' Johnson & Johnson Headquarters. Internationally recognized for their work creating landscapes that are socially and ecologically responsible, Hanna/Olin's twenty year partnership realized designs for Battery Park City (1980-86), Bryant Park for the New York Public Library (1988-1992), Westlake Square in Seattle, Washington (1989), the Ellis Island National Monument (1992), and the Los Angeles Downtown Strategic Plan (1992).

In 1995 Hanna established an independent practice, RM Hanna Landscape Architects (1995-2005), to be more directly involved in the design process. Although his office now had fewer than five people, the scope of his work did not decrease. Projects with this office include Australia's Central National Area (1995-2002), the Landscape Plan for the University of Washington Tacoma (1992-2000), and Tianfu Square Master Plan in Chengdu, People's Republic of China (2000).

Following Hanna's death in 2003, his wife Beverly Briggs continued RM Hanna Landscape Architects until 2005.
