ROGERSPARTNERS

ROB ROGERS, FAIA, is the founding partner of ROGERS PARTNERS Architects+Urban Designers. His work explores the limits of architecture and the overlap of disciplines: the spaces where architecture, landscapes and the public realm converge. Designing in cities around the country, the firm creates work built on research, analysis, discovery, and shared experience. His current projects include the redesign of Constitution Gardens on the National Mall, the new St. Pete Pier in St. Petersburg, Florida, Buckhead Park Over GA400 in Atlanta, Georgia, and new buildings for the Madison Square Boys & Girls Club, and Rice and Drexel Universities. An active lecturer, Rob has served as critic and professor at academic institutions around the country including the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard University, Yale University, Columbia University, Rice University, Washington University in St. Louis, Syracuse University, the Southern California Institute of Architecture (SCI-Arc), and Tulane University, among others. He is currently Chair of the William Ward Watkin Advisory Council at Rice University. Rob holds a Bachelor of Arts and a Bachelor in Architecture from Rice University and a Master of Design Studies, with distinction, from Harvard University's Graduate School of Design.
