

William J. Higgins, Principal with Higgins Quasebarth & Partners LLC, has advised private, corporate, government and institutional clients in the preservation and rehabilitation of historic properties for more than 30 years. The firm approaches every project with the view that historic buildings have a unique identity as complex physical objects, and containers for ideas. This insight has guided their collaborations with leading designers and institutions for projects such as The American Museum of Natural History, The Pierpont Morgan Library, The Frick Collection, The Whitney Museum of American Art, The New York Public Library, Columbia University, Harvard University, The Brooklyn Navy Yard, Apple and many private, public and not-for-profit development companies. Mr. Higgins holds a BA from Boston College and an MS in Historic Preservation from Columbia University and has taught and lectured frequently at Columbia University, New York University and Pratt Institute.
